

Thin Line

A Roadside Attractions Project

Sean P Drysdale

Copyright

All rights reserved. This publication and its contents are mine. This means that if you are thinking of doing anything that could even be vaguely construed as copyright infringement just don't do it. If you think you can print or reproduce this publication in any way, in whole or in part, the answer is no you cannot. If you would like to share this ebook with others, thank you for the support and please direct them to:

<https://seandrysdale.com/books/>

Let's Talk

- If you would like a physical copy of this publication.
- If you represent a gallery or exhibition space.
- If you would like to go for a walk.

Sean P Drysdale
<https://seandrysdale.com>
spd@seandrysdale.com

Publication design and layout by Sean P Drysdale using Affinity Publisher
All text and photographs by Sean P Drysdale

Draft 01 - 2021-10-11

Tools

All but one image was captured using Nikon D7100, Sigma 10-20 mm f3.5, AF- Nikkor 35mm f1.8, AF-S Micro Nikkor 105mm f2.8.

Guidance on Viewing

As in previous digital monographs, I suggest viewing this one using Adobe Acrobat Reader in full screen mode (Ctrl / Cmd + L). Pages are presented as double page spreads.

Foreword

I love this land and I love exploring it photographically. "Roadside Attractions" is an umbrella project that captures different visual and conceptual perspectives, which continue to evolve from my experiences of driving local paved and gravel roads. Those paths usually take me east onto the prairies versus west into the mountains. Besides the sense of hope that comes from a big sky, there is a graphic cleanliness to the prairies and foothills. Under shifting light, forms and subtle variations in the landscape become visually significant, and beg for quiet appreciation.

As a business analyst, I synthesized information from disparate sources and then produced material that was of value to my clients. A similar approach also touches "Roadside Attractions". Four of the sources informing this project are as follows:

Eadweard Muybridge was paid $25,000 in 1878 by Leland Stanford to help Stanford win a bet that a galloping horse has at some point, all four hooves off the ground. Ever since then, the series has been near and dear to photography.

Hilla and Bernd Becher, founders of the Dusseldorf School of Photography, proposed, practised, and taught a rigorous approach to photography that valued technical excellence and objectivity. The Bechers' collection of fading industrial artifacts may not be instantly captivating, but time spent with those photos is very gratifying. I find that much of the work from the Dusseldorf school has a melancholy quality, which is not always to my taste.

Edward Burtynsky has spoken about being influenced by painters. I also think he has some heritage in the Dusseldorf school. I have long been drawn to the conflict between beauty and subject matter in his work.

The flick and click of Instagram epitomizes our fleeting attention span. As a response, I strive for the antithesis of that experience. One of my photographic objectives is to first capture a viewer's attention through an expression of beauty, and then provide enough depth of content to reward the patient viewer.

"Thin Line" is a work-in-progress that began in 2018, and is a series under the "Roadside Attractions" umbrella.

In this series I am, in part, probing my set of conflicting responses to the environment. The prairie landscape evokes a wonderful sense of space. Yet, the land I drive through, and my experience of that land is defined and confined by a grid of evenly spaced roads, symbols of ownership, and signs of control.

As always, thank you for being a witting or unwitting part of my photographic journey.

Love, Sean / October 2021

Page 04/05 - 2018-04

Page 06/07 - 2018-04

Page 08/09 - 2018-04

Page 10/11 - 2018-04

Page 28/29 - 2019-04

Page 30/31 - 2019-05

Page 32/33 - 2019-05

Page 34/35 - 2019-07

Page 12/13 - 2018-05

Page 14/15 - 2018-05

Page 16/17 - 2018-05

Page 18/19 - 2018-11

Page 36/37 - 2019-07

Page 38/39 - 2020-02

Page 40/41 - 2020-03

Page 42/43 - 2020-07

Page 20/21 - 2018-11

Page 22/23 - 2019-03

Page 24/25 - 2019-03

Page 26/27 - 2019-04

Page 44/45 - 2020-08

Biography

Sean P Drysdale lives in Calgary between the overt beauty of the Canadian Rockies and the serenity of the prairies. He returned to photography as an art form in 2016. Drysdale graduated from Emily Carr College of Art and Design in 1984, where he studied photography. Subsequent studies in mathematics and computers at Simon Fraser University led to a career in information management.

Exhibitions and Organizing

Graduation Group Show; Emily Carr College of Art and Design;Vancouver; 1984

Member of Organizing Committee;The Warehouse Show;Vancouver; 1984

Solo Photography Show; OR Gallery;Vancouver; 1983

Publications

30 New Walks (ebook) , 2020 ISBN 978-1-7774330-0-0

Meanwhile in Abingdon (ebook), September 2021

Rills (digital monograph), October 2021

Sentinels (digital monograph), October 2021

Thin Line (digital monograph), October 2021