

HAPPY ACCIDENT

Posted on 2018-02-03 2019-12-17 by spd_wp_admin

Dear Reader,

Here is another photo that may make you question my sanity or at least perspective. I have kept coming back to it since it was first captured last weekend. The more I looked at it, the more I enjoyed it.

It is the result, in part, of negligence. I thought the shutter speed and aperture settings for the sunset photo earlier in the morning were a little strange. When I got home from that morning's ramble, I realized that the photo below had been captured at an ISO setting of 1000. That is a substantially higher than I normally use. I think the grain works.

The second photo is one of the sunrise photos from that day that survived the digital cutting room floor. I like just the hint of sun rising to light the day.

Cheers, Sean

I am liking the sunrise! The other one, I'm not so sure. This might be a case where the web version has been downsized to take the subtle detail out. Maybe if I was looking on the big computer rather than laptop with a filthy screen. Hmmm.

Thank you for visiting and the comment. I am sure a cleaner screen would help but you may be disappointed. The picture has limited if any details :).
