

TWICE BAKED BUT STILL HALF

Posted on 2019-12-07 2019-12-09 by spd_wp_admin

Dear Reader (2019-12-07),

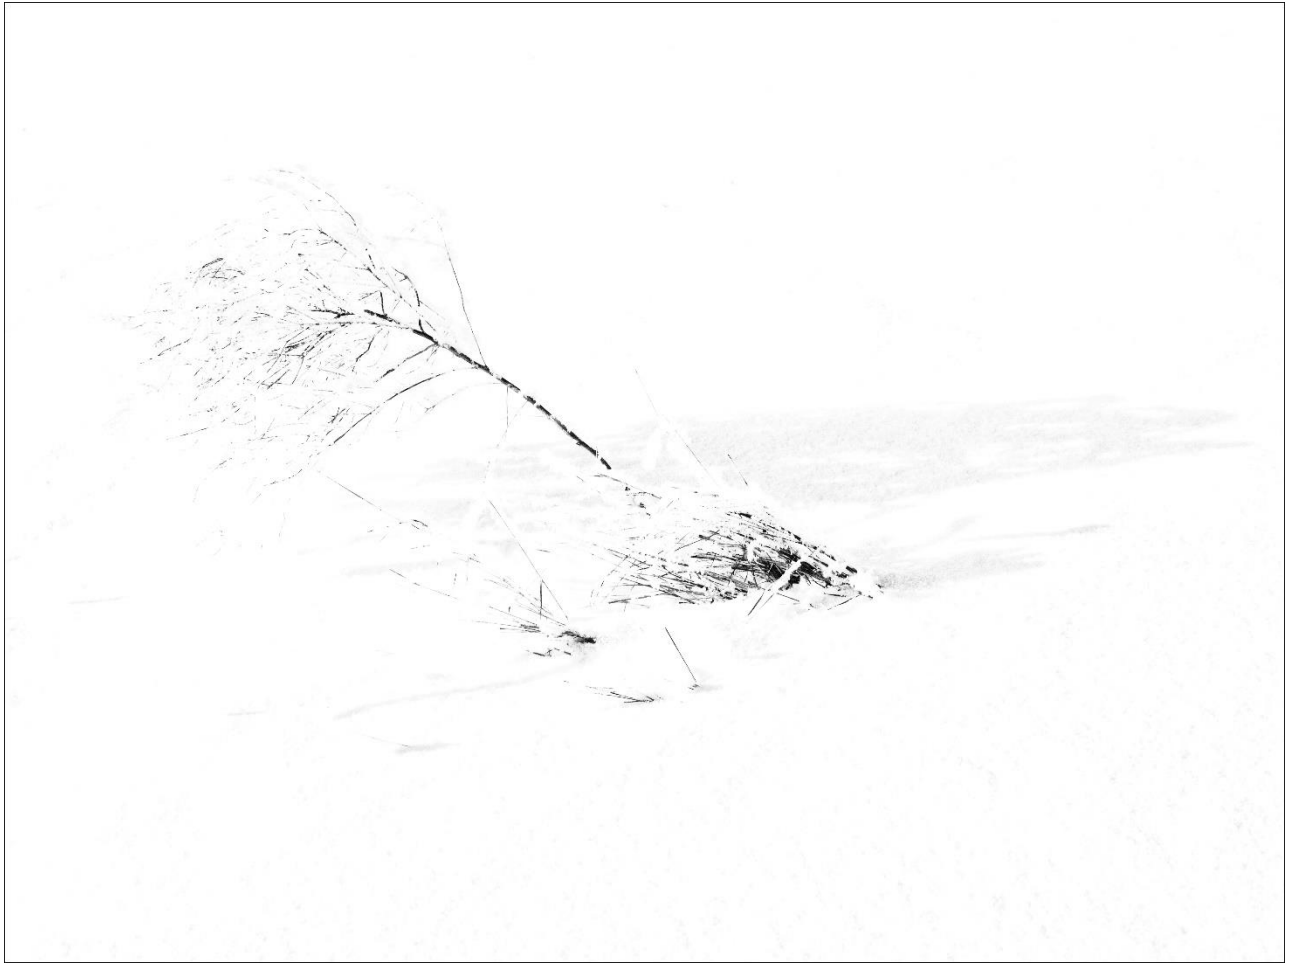

Last Sunday (Dec. 1), Keith and I wandered along some of the paths at the Ann & Sandy Cross Conservation Area. His image collection from that walk can be found here. My images were banal and uninteresting, until I started playing in Lightroom. The first two images are from the walk. On Wednesday, I went out looking for images that could be treated in the same way.

I have written before about fishing, and Wednesday's fishing trip was initially going to be to Black Diamond / Turner Valley. Sometimes the fish are much closer. I was lured to the south end of Fish Creek Park, by a half seen fish. The fish seen at 90 km/h from Stoney Trail turned out to be real. I never left Calgary.

This is Day 4 of Half Baked Ideas

- Day 1 – So Many Half-Baked Ideas
- Day 2 – Ethnic Flavours
- Day 3 – Whiplash
- Day 4 – Twice Baked But Still Half – Today

Cheers, Sean

2 Replies to “Twice Baked But Still Half”

1. spd_wp_admin says:

2019-12-10 at 23:22 Edit

As always, thank you for visiting and commenting. These photos may never meet the printer. A. though has printed the trees on fabric and is going to rework the image in embroidery.

2. Keith says:

2019-12-10 at 13:15 Edit

I am unused to looking at such high key images (I think that is the right word) and after several visits, I am still unsure what I think. I liked the trees. I can see where the paper selection for printing these would be very difficult.