

A GHOSTLY INTERLUDE

In the pale light of the last morning of 2019, I found these ghosts south of Calgary. May the coming year meet all your needs, and half your wants. May you also continue to find joy, support, and gratitude in your photographic journeys. Happy New Year.

Cheers, Sean

I love the contrast of the optimistic air of the red brick contrasting with the weather worn paint and air of neglect. I wonder where the mural artist ended up, going on to fame and fortune like a modern day Dorian Grey, or dwindling like the mural. Were the coffee and treats good?

Thank you for visiting and commenting. The coffee and BLT on a bagel were excellent. I made some idiotic mistakes Tuesday and saw a number of possibilities. This means there could be a High River road trip in the very near future.
