

FIVE STANS 11

Posted on 2024-02-10 by spd_wp_admin

Dear Reader (2024-02-10),

In today's penultimate Kyrgyzstan (and then we'll change to the next Stan) post there are multiple points of interest:

- ~ 01 to 04 – we drive first to Uzgen, a UNESCO World Heritage site,
- ~ 02 – an out of focus, possibly over-processed image from a bus window, which I still like
- ~ 04 – we stop and take note of a famous figure (possibly Babur),
- ~ 05 to 08 – Uzgen
- ~ 09 to 10 – we visit one of the oldest markets on the silk road, the Osh market
- ~ 12 to 14 – In Osh we walk up a hill past a museum, which I'm pretty sure was used in an early James Bond film to see the little mosque of Babur, founder of the Moghul Dynasty. Both the museum and the mosque were closed because Tuesday rules applied. Throughout central Asia rules change by the day, and sometimes by the hour. The only option available is to accept the rules as they are applied when they apply. For someone who appreciates random events, I found this approach to rules humorous and life-affirming.
- ~ 15 to 20 – In Osh
- ~ 19 – The tourist information office
- ~ 20 – A glimpse out the bus window.

02

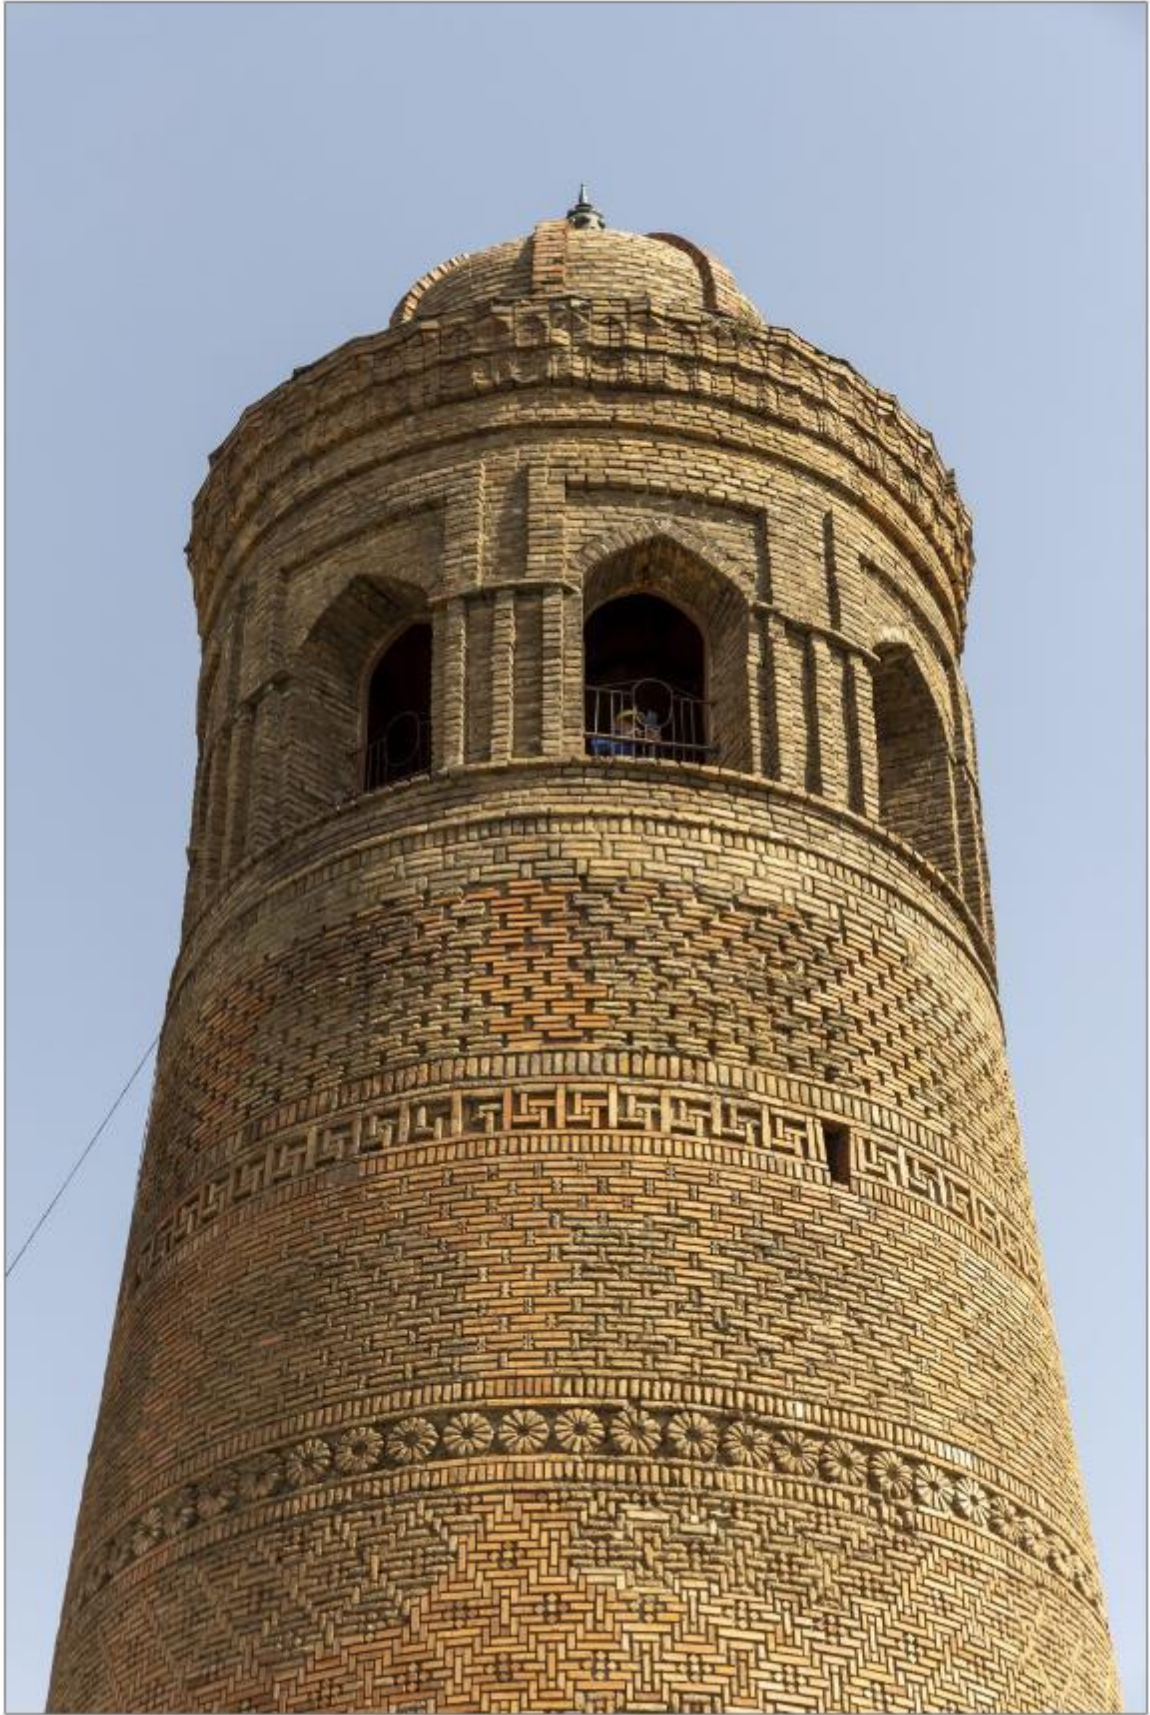

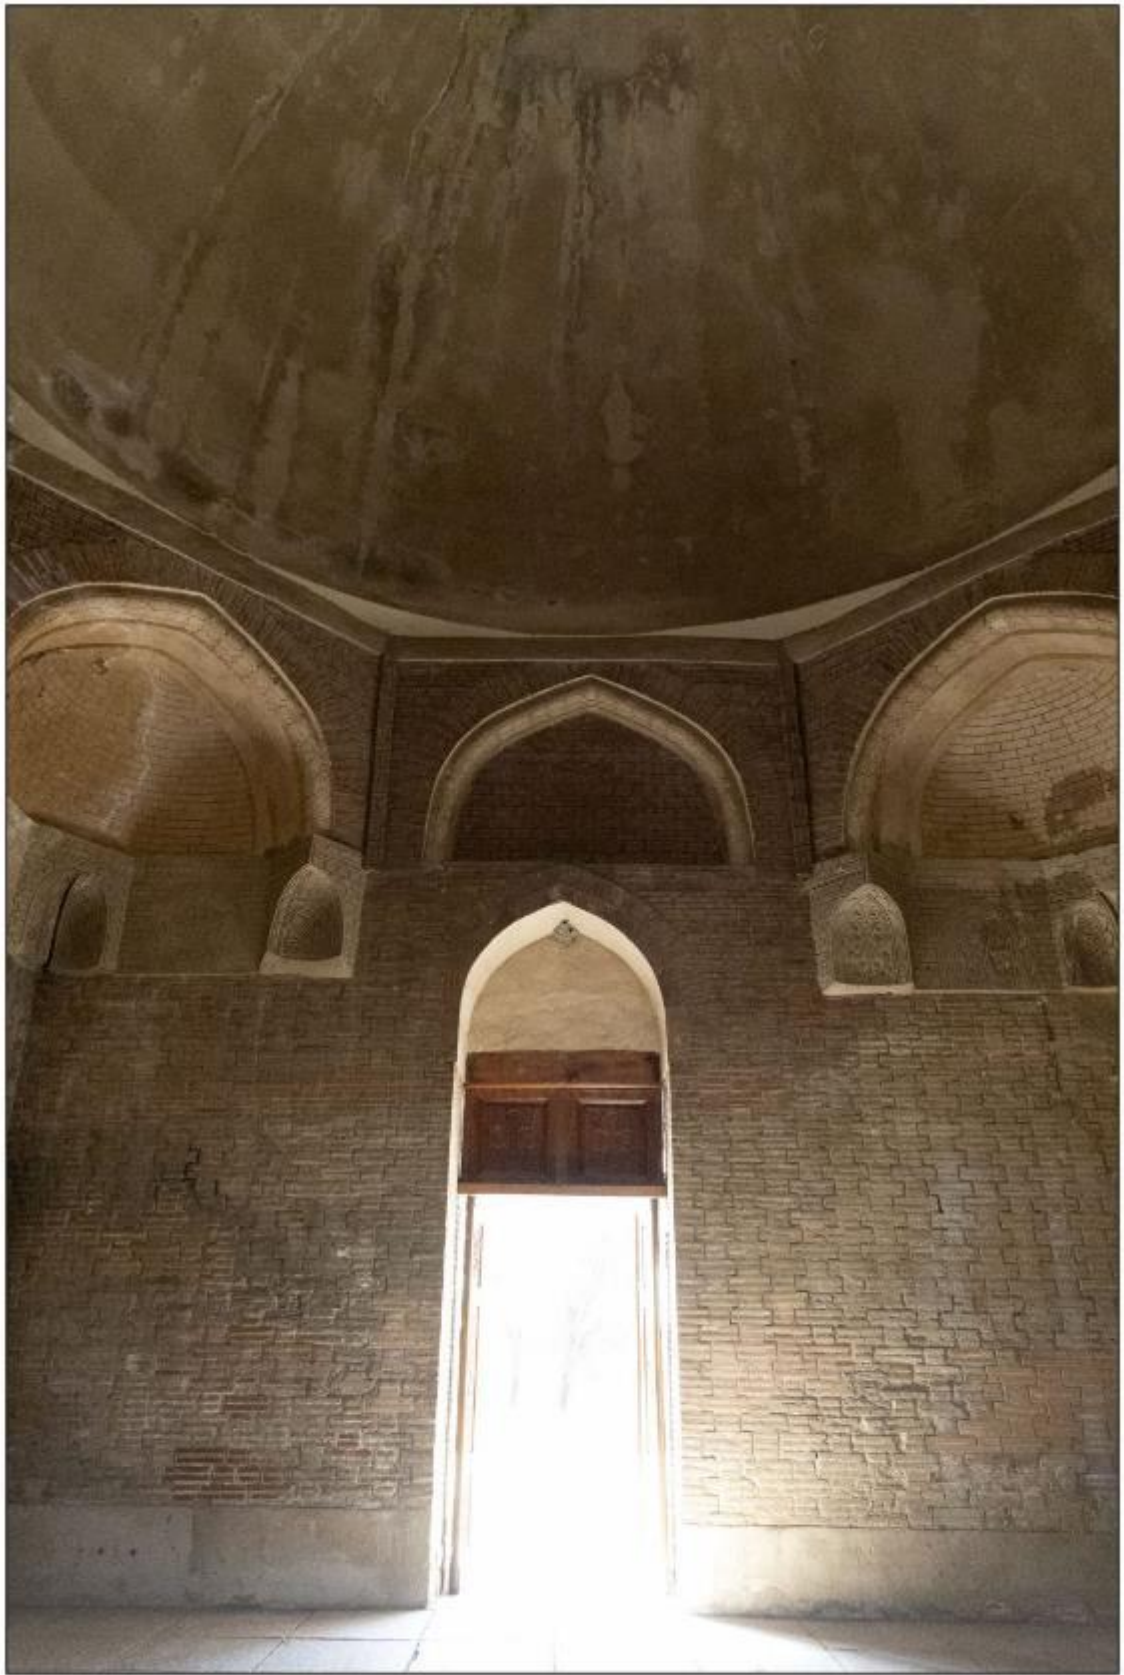

03

04

09

13

11

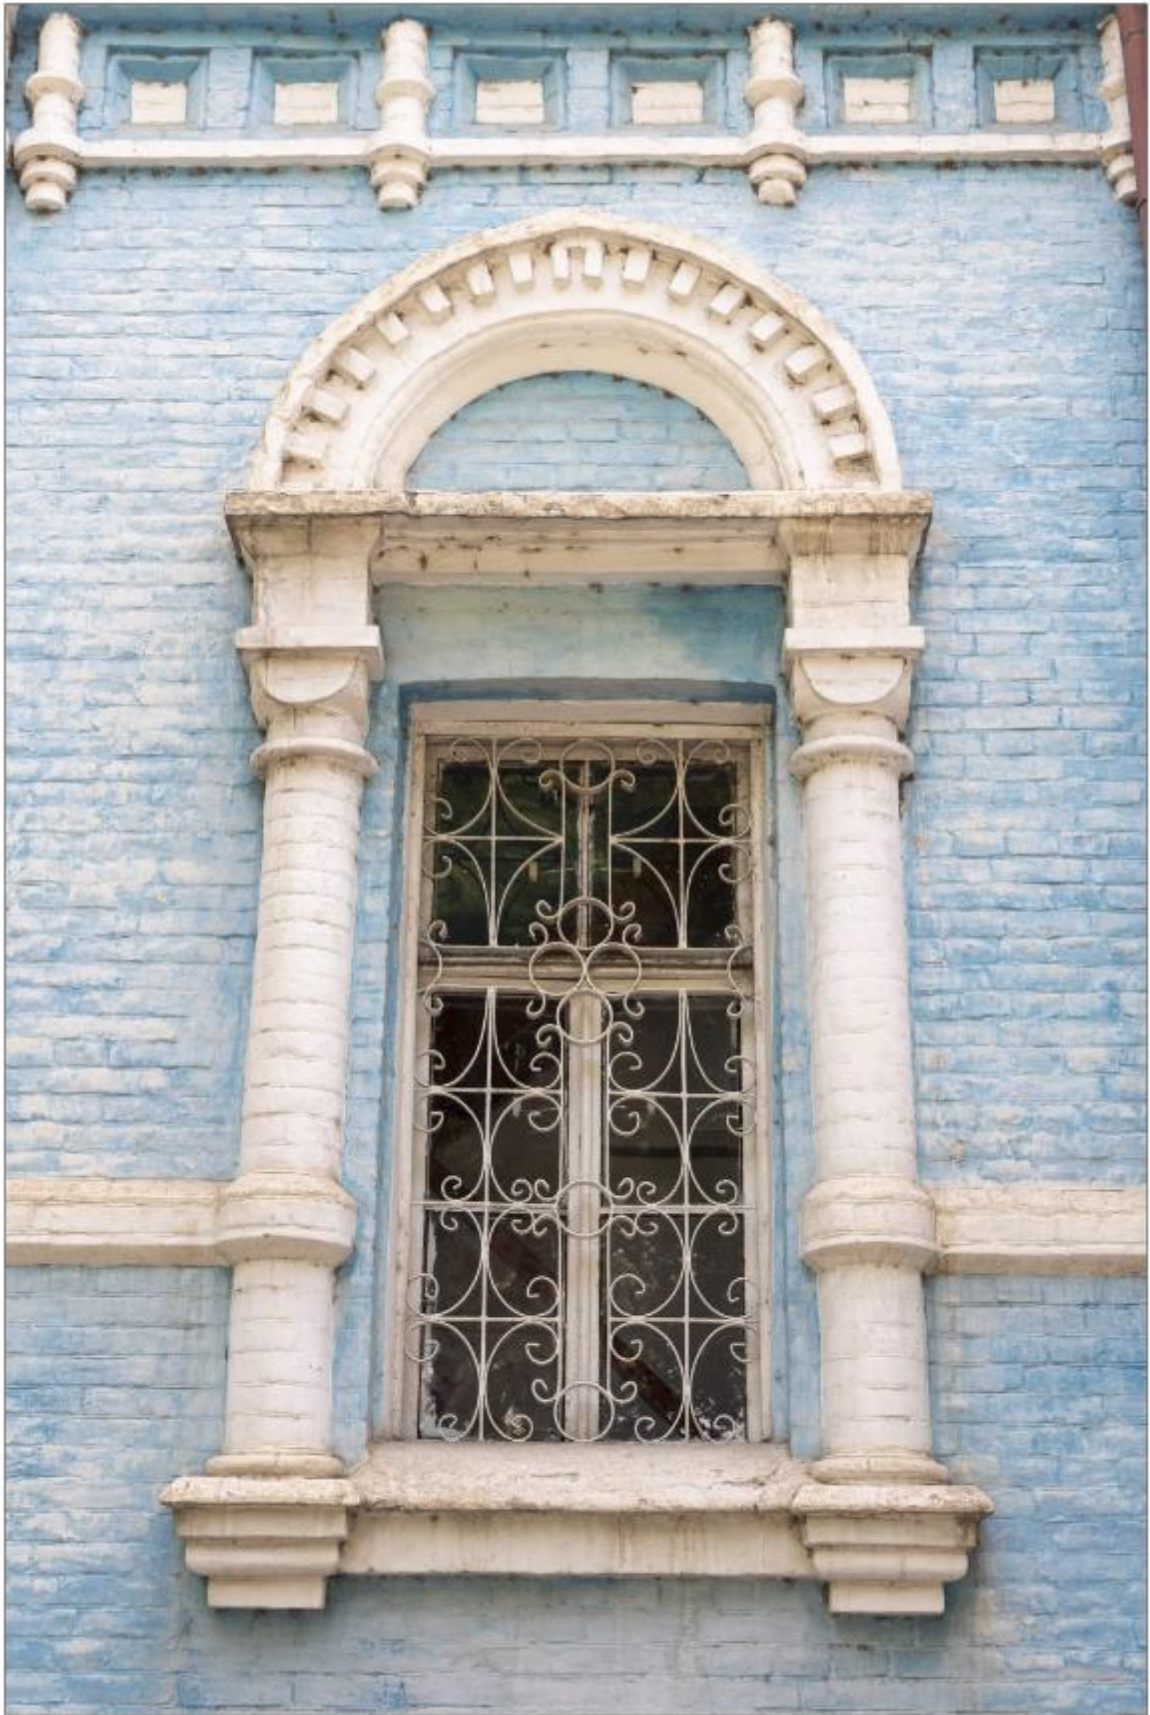

12

14

15

17

18

19

20